Subject: 5 minutes

Bob – I'd like to catch you for 5 minutes today between your meetings, but in case we are not able to meet with your busy schedule, I thought I would write you this note.

I spoke with John Blystone last night at length and I'd like to apologize for how I have handled the AAC situation as the appointed business leader of that site. Regardless of who said what to whom I have felt thrust into the role from Dec 8th as representing the views of the suspended employees, and the reality is that I am professionally embarrassed by Kevin Brittingham's and Lynsey Thompson's behavior and judgment that led to this situation, their inability to follow rules that they were given, trained on, and reinforced on, and their unwillingness to accept responsibility up to this point for their actions. They are my responsibility, as is the AAC business, and therefore what they do and fail to do reflects directly on me. I have been caught up between doing what I thought I was supposed to do to protect AAC's innovative culture and individual employee value from an investment perspective consistent with guidance I was given by previous leadership and what is ultimately the harder right of forcing AAC to be the kind of company it should be consistent with what is right. Ultimately, compliance is never an area that should be compromised, regardless of what has previously occurred in these firearms companies.

I have learned a lot from the last few weeks, and I appreciate the patience and support that you and John have shown in allowing me to work through this issue. It is my intention to prepare that business to succeed, regardless of whether they come back or not, and to make sure that the AAC business going forward is a model of compliance, cooperation, performance, and quality starting with the people and the products.
